

IMMIGRANT WORKERS WANT THE Freedom to Form a Union

Immigrant workers are especially vulnerable to workplace abuses. They suffer higher rates of on-the-job injuries, illnesses and fatalities than other workers.

Immigrant workers want to join together to win better pay, better benefits, job safety, better working conditions, fair treatment and a voice on the job.

But employers routinely threaten, harass, intimidate—even fire—workers who try to form unions. In addition, more than half of employers threaten to call the Citizenship and Immigration bureau when immigrant workers form their own union.

And We All Pay the Price

When employers block workers' freedom to form unions, wages and benefits shrink. Inequality and poverty grow, race and gender gaps widen, public services are shortchanged and the door opens wide to more employer abuse of workers. All workers.

It's Time to Fight Back

Today's unions are campaigning to make sure every worker in this country can exercise the legal right to a union voice at work. We all must care and act. We're engaging union members, our communities and our elected leaders in the fight to restore workers' freedom to form unions.

JOIN US!

Join us on the front lines of protecting immigrant workers' rights by getting involved today.

- Support the Immigrant Workers Freedom Ride, a nationwide campaign for immigrant rights. Visit www.iwfr.org.
- Plan now to take part in workers' rights actions on Dec. 10, International Human Rights Day. Contact your local labor council to get involved.

